

Three and worn with the wonders that crowd all the space of the Pair.

A dated and bewildered Sightseer falls asleep in the wicker wheel-chair.

But still all the sights and impressions have got his poor head in a whirl,—
He sees in his dreams a wild jumbs of it all pass around in a swirl.

Haunted, pursued, persecuted, he dreams as they which him away — The fate of a man, flabbergasted, who tried "to see it all in one day."
